Courage during hard times in occupied Paris Von Alexander Urban Andre's story nicely told by her daughter. A pity these kind of stories come so late when there are hardly any people left to witness..... Or is this done on purpose, given the fact that in France everybody was in the resistance???. Whereas I enjoy reading about Andre's efforts, I am not the great fan of de

Gaulle (and no, he was not a General), who made everybody believe he freed the country, forgetting about the great effort of the SOE!

Kurzbeschreibung A true story of bravery and courage in occupied Paris. Andre Griotteray was only nineteen years old when the Germans invaded France. During the four years of Occupation she transformed from a teenager in search of fun and frivolity into a capable, fearless young woman, risking her life in service to her country and the Resistance. Always modest about her actions during the war, Andre has been decorated by the French government for her bravery. Now her moving and courageous story is brought vividly to life, told for the first time by her own daughter. After the German invasion of Paris in June 1940, nineteen-year-old Andre Griotteray found herself living in an occupied city, forced to work alongside the invaders. Unable to stand by and do nothing, her younger brother Alain set up his own resistance network to do whatever he could to defy the Nazis. Andre risked her life to help him without hesitation. While working at the Police Headquarters in Paris, she printed and distributed copies of an underground news sheet and stole blank ID cards that were passed on to men and women attempting to escape France. She travelled across France, picking up and dropping off intelligence ultimately destined for the British and Americans, always fearless in the face of immense pressure. And then, one day, she was betrayed and arrested. Based on Andre's diaries from the time and conversations over the years, Francelle Bradford White recounts her mother's incredible story: the narrow escapes and moments of terror alongside a typical teenager's concerns about food, fashion and boys. This fascinating story tells of one woman's struggle and of the bravery that ultimately led to her being awarded the Mdaille de la Rsistance, the Croix de guerre and the Lgion d'honneur. Pressestimmen "An interesting book... touching in its juxtaposition of war news with a young woman's preoccupation with clothes, boyfriends and, as the war went on, the search for food." -- Barbara Dryden, blogger "absolutely fascinating" - Kirsty Hewitt, Nudge blog
